

Demand Surcharges

FedEx — Updated July 22, 2026

During times of elevated volumes, high demand for capacity, and increased operating costs across our network, FedEx will implement Demand surcharges. Demand surcharges are determined for each market based on regular assessments of shipment volume and network capacity. FedEx reserves the right to reassess and/or reinstate the Demand Surcharge at its sole discretion.

Demand — Residential Delivery Charge

Demand — Residential Delivery Charge will adjust dynamically each week. During each calculation week (defined below), customer's shipping volume and peaking factor will be calculated based on the formula set forth below to determine the surcharge amount applied for the corresponding application week (defined below). A two week lag will apply between the shipping activity calculation and the surcharge application.

"Calculation week" is the week during which customer's shipping volume is calculated. "Application week" is the week during which the surcharge is applied based on the corresponding calculation week.

For customers at the enterprise level who ship more than 20,000 residential* and FedEx Ground Economy packages (total for U.S. domestic shipments) during a calculation week, the Demand — Residential Delivery Charge will apply for the corresponding application week. The Demand — Residential Delivery Charge will be assessed in addition to the Residential Delivery Charge, and any contracted discount or cap the customer may have on the Residential Delivery Charge will not apply to the Demand — Residential Delivery Charge.

The amount charged per package during the application week will be based on a peaking factor, reflected as a percentage increase in the chart below, which is determined by dividing the residential* and FedEx Ground Economy packages shipped during the corresponding calculation week by the weekly average residential* and FedEx Ground Economy packages shipped June 1, 2026–June 28, 2026, and then multiplying by 100. Peaking factor and amount charged are determined based on the type of U.S. package service.

For purposes of calculating weekly volume during any calculation week that contains a holiday, weekly package volume will be adjusted to account for the one fewer operating day by multiplying the volume tendered during the week by 5 and then dividing by 4. *Excludes FedEx One Rate packages.

Demand — Residential Delivery Charge per Package by Peaking Factor

Service	>105%–125%	>125%–150%	>150%–200%	>200%–300%	>300%–400%	>400%
